PREFACE

This first revision of the Montana Directory of Manufacturing represents a continuation of service to the people of Montana, as well as the nation. As a joint venture of the Engineering Experiment Station at Montana State College and the Montana State Planning Board, the listings contained in this volume provide as complete a description of manufacturing industries in Montana as is possible. The primary objective has been to gain the most complete inventory of production facilities in the state that can reasonably be done.

An Industrial Survey and Directory of Manufacturing in Montana was published by the Montana Chamber of Commerce in 1955. It was followed in 1958 by our first manufacturing directory. Original planning called for a revised publication every two years but lack of sufficient funds has meant that this schedule could not be achieved. It is hoped that arrangements can be made so that more frequent, up-to-date directories can be provided.

Most information for the directory was obtained from mailed questionnaires, personal visits, local chambers of commerce, telephone directories, and the Unemployment Compensation Commission of Montana. Detailed entries are included only where permission was granted by an official representative of the firm involved. Others are shown merely by name, address, and general product classification. In general, firms that were determined to be engaged in retail selling only were not included in this compilation.

A brief description of Montana's industrial opportunities has been provided by the Montana State Planning Board and is included in this edition. If there are accusations of prejudice as a result of this, such feelings will be cheerfully admitted. It is felt, however, that this statement does provide a great deal of worthwhile information about Montana and what she has to offer.

Information contained in the directory is as comprehensive and accurate as the basic sources and reasonable care in preparation would permit. In any work of this type, however, there will undoubtedly be errors and omissions. This is particularly true in this case, where only occasional attention could be paid to the revision of the directory. Users and readers are asked to call corrections to the attention of the Engineering Experiment Station at Montana State College.

The advice and assistance of the Montana Chamber of Commerce, local chambers of commerce, Unemployment Compensation Commission of the State of Montana, and numerous representatives of private firms throughout the state was greatly appreciated and is gratefully acknowledged. Special thanks should go to the senior Industrial Engineering students who, over the years, have provided invaluable assistance in keeping directory material up to date.

EXPLANATION OF LISTINGS

This directory is divided into three parts, designed to show firms by product, alphabetically by name, and by location.

Since it was felt that the product section would be referred to most frequently, Part I is made up of firms classified by products. Firms are classified according to the Standard Industrial Classification Manual of the U. S. Bureau of the Budget. Part I, then, includes all the information regarding specific firms which was available for publication. Where information was not available or permission to use such information was not granted, the firms have been classified as well as possible and name, address, and general products shown.

Part II is an alphabetical listing by firm name so that a specific firm may be readily located and referred by classification number to the complete listing in Part I.

The final section, Part III, a geographic listing, shows firms located in each city with these cities appearing in alphabetical order. Again the classification number is indicated so that the complete entry may be found in Part I.

To facilitate use of the directory, coding of entries has not been used. It is not necessary, therefore, to refer to a coding explanation in order to understand the entry. It was felt that in this way information would be more readily available to the user. Further explanation may be needed, however, in some instances. Where figures are shown in the form of a range, as in the number of employees or some plant capacities, this indicates that the individual firm falls somewhere between the established limits. This was done to simplify answers on the original questionnaires. Also, unless otherwise stated, the plant capacities shown are for a standard 8-hour shift.

Montana's Industrial Opportunities

Visitors to Montana after seeing our magnificent scenery and sampling our varied recreation often exclaim: "If I could only get a job in Montana we'd move here tomorrow; Montana has everything!"

Yes—Montana Does Have Everything! and Montanans not only welcome further industrial development, but feel it is their responsibility, as citizens, to tell the world of industry about the State's many physical resources and human skills.

LIVING CONDITIONS

Opportunity for material wealth is only one of the many assets to be gained by living in Montana. Montanans are happy and relaxed in the scenic splendor of their great outdoors—IN ALL SEASONS. Here a man can get off work and within a few minutes be at his favorite trout stream, or follow his retriever to the duck blind and perhaps bag a pheasant or two on the way home. You might find that same man on another day gliding down a snow covered ski slope, or taking the family boat out to the lake for an evening of water skiing after work. Better still, anyone can live only a few blocks from his work in Montana. No two-hour commuting for us!

For those who prefer less strenuous recreation, there are many spectator activities such as rodeos, horse shows, fairs, Indian festivities, and of course, magnificent scenery and historical points of interest. Others find satisfaction in pursuit of hobbies such as fossil collecting, photography, rock and gem prospecting, exploring ghost towns, and painting.

And, of course, in many communities of the State you will find the conventional recreational activities such as bridge tournaments, bowling, golf, concerts, lectures, and stage plays.

Montana's dry, blue-sky climate, open spaces, and unparalleled natural recreation advantages provide ideal working conditions. This observation is substantiated by the fact that college educators, engineers, and other scientists originally from other parts of the nation normally remain in Montana even though they are offered considerably more money to work elsewhere.

CLIMATE

Montana's large area and great differences in elevation result in a highly diverse climate for different locations throughout the State.

The rest of the nation, having been advised through newscasts only of the record lows, might think of Montana as the "cold spot" of the United States, but people living here who have also lived in other regions know this is a misconception. Although the annual and daily ranges of temperature are sometimes large and over the years some quite low temperatures have occurred, these extremes are unusual. (This is particularly apparent when it is realized that the weather bureau stations, which record these record lows, are often located on high mountain passes where few people live.)

Due to the great size of the State (east to west, Montana extends one-sixth of the way across the nation) and to the diverting effect of north-south mountain ranges, most storms reported for Montana actually affect only a portion of the State, while the remainder may be enjoying mild weather and sunshine. This is not true in many states, where a storm usually covers all or most of a state's area.

Warm spells (chinooks) in January and sweater weather in July are not uncommon. (Montana's average maximum daytime temperatures are: January—+28°F, July—+85°F.)

An important factor to consider is that of relative humidity which is normally much lower in Montana than the U. S. average and results in far greater human comfort. Low relative humidity not only permits relatively high summer temperatures to be pleasant but also extends the pleasant temperature range down into the lower temperatures. (Montana's July average daytime relative humidity ranges from 33% to 38%).

Also, Montana's higher than average elevation compounds this favorable effect of low relative humidity, resulting in a very pleasant year-'round climate which is much milder than is ordinarily assumed. Most Montanans live in protected lowlands averaging over 3,000 feet elevation.

Montana enjoys a very high average percentage of possible sunshine. The value of this, too, is increased by our higher altitude, as our clean, rarer atmosphere passes more of this energy to us. (The average percentage of possible sunshine in Montana is January—45%, July—78%.)

All Montanans enjoy the infrequency of rainy weather. (Average annual precipitation in Montana is only 15 inches, although this varies from less than 8 to over 30 inches in various communities in the State.) However, our high mountains provide us with abundant year-'round, high-quality water for irrigation and industries.

In considering a site for a modern plant or research laboratory the total annual costs of winter heating and summer air conditioning should be considered. (Low humidity reduces both these costs in Montana, and generally summer air conditioning is unnecessary.)

EDUCATION

Montanans are justly proud of their educational system which provides maximum opportunity for our youngsters at all grade levels. Montana ranks among the nation's highest in its reputation for good schools and in the importance placed upon education by its citizens.

In the percentage of elementary teachers graduated from accredited institutions, Montana ranked first in the nation (1958) with 100%. Regarding the percentage of high school teachers graduated from accredited institutions, Montana ranked third in the nation with 95.8%.

The six units of the State University System with campuses at Bozeman, Missoula, Butte, Billings, Havre, and Dillon offer curricula leading to degrees in nearly all professions. Montana's excellent private colleges are located at Billings, Great Falls, and Helena.

Faculty members of national and international repute remain with our Montana schools—often because they prefer to live and work near the uncluttered recreational expanses of Montana, yet enjoy the cultural and academic benefits of small, friendly college towns.

Both state and private schools in Montana are very cooperative in providing advanced courses in technical studies whenever the need arises, enabling industry's technical personnel to continue their education.

RESEARCH

Montanans are research-minded. Organized research in Montana is carried on principally by institutions of higher learning, governmental agencies, private business organizations, and private non-profit institutions.

At Butte and Anaconda, research is carried on in the fields of geology, mining, and ore processing.

In Bozeman, research is conducted in agriculture (including veterinary and wool laboratories), engineering, as well as the various other sciences.

In Missoula, research is carried on in the biological sciences, geology, business, economics, education, governmental, forestry, conservation, and wildlife.

In Helena, scientific, medical, and electronics research is carried out.

Federal agencies in Montana have extensive research facilities, particularly in the U. S. Forest Service which has recently dedicated its Northern Forest Fire Research Laboratory in Missoula. The famous laboratory at Hamilton operated by the U. S. Public Health Service is particularly well known.

At the state level, many agencies have research programs; for example, the Bureau of Mines and Geology, State Forester, Fish and Game Commission, State Engineer's Office, State Planning Board, and others.

Numerous business organizations conduct research in the normal course of business. Outstanding examples are the mining industry, private utilities, and railroads. Several oil and chemical companies maintain research facilities at their Montana installations.

According to a comprehensive study of research laboratory location factors conducted by a major midwest research institute, by far the most important factor in choosing the location for a research facility is the availability of scientific personnel to a proposed site. Montana ranks high in the factors found to be most important in making available these scientists and engineers; recreation, climate, schools, and opportunity for higher education.

LABOR

The occupations of Montana's labor force have been shifting. More are now engaged in manufacturing and service occupations with fewer in agriculture and mining.

Most Montana labor is not only competitive on a rate basis, but it is more than competitive on a productivity basis. This is understandable when one considers that the Montana workman is above average in education. Furthermore, a fair portion have ranch or farm backgrounds and are, therefore, mechanically inclined, adaptable, dependable, and self-reliant. The Montana laborer is happy in his surroundings as a result of all the extra benefits derived from Montana life, and he is energetic due to Montana's ideal four-season climate.

New industry in Montana has found the above to be true. Mr. F. B. McCoy, General Superintendent of Furnace Plants and Mining Operations for the Victor Chemical Company, says: "We have found Montana labor to be efficient and cooperative".

Many Montanans are skilled artisans or mechanics or trained, experienced professionals who have migrated to Montana for its living advantages. As a result, many Montana employers have found an unexpected reserve of these special abilities.

RESOURCES

Montana's economy is presently based on its natural resources, and for good reason it is known as "The Treasure State". Many of these resources, particularly minerals, are virtually untapped and awaiting the right time for development. For many, that time is near at hand. As mineral resources in other areas are depleted, population and industrialization move westward. Agricultural production, a "renewable resource", is increasing steadily year by year in both quantity and variety.

Montana's latest rank in production among the states was: First — vermiculite, tame mustard, chrome. Second—coal reserves, zinc, manganese. Third—wheat, silver, barley. Fourth—phosphate rock, sheep. Fifth—copper, flax. Sixth—beef cattle, sugar beets.

In addition to these resources which are developed to a considerable extent, many others, less developed, are available, including: antimony, arsenic, asbestos, barite, bentonite, bismuth, cadmium, calcite, clays, columbium, corundum, feldspar, fluorspar, gold, graphite, gypsum, indium, iron, kaolin, kyanite, lead, limestone, magnesium, mica, molybdenum, platinum, pumice, quartz, rare earths, silica sand, sapphires, selenium, sodium chloride, sodium sulphate, stone, sulphur, talc, thorium, tungsten, uranium, vanadium, and zircon.

Other resources to provide the raw matetrials of industry in Montana are: natural gas, petroleum, oil shales, timber, and a wide variety of agricultural products. In addition to these, existing industry in Montana produces a variety of products which could be utilized as the raw materials for other industry. Among those produced are: aluminum, sulphuric acid, elemental phosphorous, phosphoric acid, cement, plaster, coke, lime, ferrochrome, sodium dichromate, and acetylene.

WATER

Water is basic to Montana's economy. The huge, developed and undeveloped water resources provide (1) long term stability to agriculture, (2) power for domestic and commercial consumption. and (3) water for industrial cooling and processing, for varied recreational activities, and for domestic use. This is in contrast to many other sections of the nation where shortage of supply, pollution, and turbidity are creating pressing problems.

Montana is a source water area having the headwaters of two of the largest rivers in America—the Missouri and the Columbia. The minimum water rate flowing from the State over the past 10 years was approximately 5,500,000 gallons per minute, and the average has been 25,000,000 gallons per minute, roughly the amount of flow necessary to supply the requirements of ten industrial metropolitan areas the size of New York City. In addition to its abundance, the quality of water is excellent. Originating from snow melting in high and rugged mountain ranges, it is comparatively free from mineral impurities, and there is a notable absence of pollution and turbidity. Because of these factors and the wide distribution of sources of water in Montana, even unusually large needs for "pure water" can be satisfied in most sections of the State where foreseeable demand may develop.

POWER

It has been said that Montana's greatest asset lies in its abundance of power. Here there is an excess available of both hydroelectric and thermoelectric power; and most important, it is low in cost. Electric power is available from private and public power organizations at low rates ranging from 2 to 9 mills per KWH depending upon quality, usage, location, and stability of demand.

FUEL

When fuel is needed, Montana has it. Nearly every city in Montana now has inexpensive natural gas service from gas produced mostly within the state. Natural gas for industrial purposes can be obtained for as low as 25c per MCF, depending on location, quantity, and stability of demand. Montana rates second in the nation in coal reserves with deposits underlying approximately 35 percent of the State's vast area of 147,000 square miles. At certain open pit operations coal can be obtained for less than $2 per ton. Industrial fuel oil is available at Montana's many refineries at lower prices than those in most other areas.

TRANSPORTATION

Montana has four scheduled airlines operating within the State providing adequate service for all our major cities. Montana has five transcontinental railroads providing efficient service in all directions. By rail, it is merely an over-night trip to the Twin Cities, Chicago, Denver, Salt Lake City, Omaha, or Seattle.

Since the State is so large, Montanans do a lot of driving, and they are justly proud of their 9,000 miles of paved highways. This also provides an excellent network for the trucking industry supplying fast service to and from all Montana cities and towns and allowing the products of Montana agriculture and industry to be within a 24-hour haul to a market population of approximately 45,000,000 people living in 18 Western and Midwest states and 4 Canadian provinces.

MARKETS

With substantial population increases in Rocky Mountain and West Coast States—and in Western Canada too—new consumer markets resulting from Montana's strategic geographical position and its scenic and recreational attractions are coming into existence. Montana cities are growing rapidly as wholesale, warehouse, and service industry centers to serve these expanding markets. This growth brings opportunity for industrial expansion in many fields.

Although most of Montana's present industry is based on raw materials and low-cost power, a wider degree of diversification is likely, particularly in certain market-oriented industries. As an example, those industries making products for the tourist or recreation enthusiast — ceramics, gun sights, skis, fishing equipment, outdoor sports clothing, etc.—should prove successful. There are 2,700,000 visitors to Montana annually who fish, hunt, hike, ski, etc. Forty-five percent of them are professional, technical, and managerial people in the higher income bracket—a ready-made market.

Other market oriented industries whose products are high in value and low in weight, such as electronics, drugs, women's apparel, etc., will find that a Montana location has certain advantages in employee satisfaction and high productivity per dollar. Our low humidity offers special advantages to an industry such as electronics.

INDUSTRIAL SITES

Montana has an unlimited supply of industrial sites; also, some industrial buildings are available. Farsighted Montana communities have zoned industrial parks and sites available for development and welcome inquiry from responsible industry. In addition, several communities have industrial development corporations which will assist in securing locations or in the erection of buildings. The railroads in Montana have planned sites available, and they and the power companies as well as the State Planning Board will assist in securing a site to suit your needs.
